Foreword

The Constitution of Kentucky is the principal law of the Commonwealth, the foundation upon which state and local governments rest. Its authority is superseded only by the Constitution of the United States and by federal law. The life of the Commonwealth and the lives of its citizens are governed, knowingly or otherwise, by the principles and strictures contained in this essential document. Kentucky's Constitution is, furthermore, a testament to the basic democratic principle of the right of self-government.

Kentucky's current Constitution, its fourth, was painstakingly written between the summer of 1890 and the spring of 1891, in the Old State Capitol. It is twice as long as the state's previous Constitution, written in 1850, and four times as long as the original 1792 Constitution, which was composed in a mere 18 days. The current document reflects the political, social, and economic changes that had occurred in Kentucky during the first 100 years of statehood, up to the time the current Constitution was written. Readers of the Constitution not only can learn what principles govern the state but also can gain some insight into the attitudes and concerns of those who framed the present document.

Seventy-nine attempts to amend the Constitution have been made since its implementation in 1892, but only 41 have been successful, the most recent in 2012. In 1967, proposed major revisions in the current Constitution were submitted to the voters, the result of efforts by a special Constitution Revision Assembly created by the General Assembly. The vote was overwhelmingly against the proposed changes. Over the years, four unsuccessful attempts also have been made to call a constitutional convention to draft a new Constitution. The most recent such failure occurred in November 1977.

The often stormy history of Kentucky's Constitution and an enlightened discussion of many of its key provisions are contained in an accompanying essay by James T. Fleming, a former director of the Legislative Research Commission. The essay was written originally in 1952, the first year copies of the Constitution were published by the Commission, and updated by Mr. Fleming in 1966. Subsequent updates and revisions have been undertaken by staff of the Legislative Research Commission.

The Story of Kentucky's Constitution: an Explanatory Essay

By James T. Fleming

Certainly all those who have framed written constitutions contemplate them as forming the fundamental and paramount law....That the people have an original right to establish, for their future government such principles as, in their opinion, shall most conduce to their own happiness, is the basis on which the whole American fabric has been erected. The exercise of this original right is a very great exertion; nor can it nor ought it to be frequently repeated. The principles, therefore, so established, are deemed fundamental....

Chief Justice John Marshall
Marbury v. Madison (1803)

Constitutions Prior to 1891

The first Constitution of Kentucky was written at Danville and adopted in 1792, the year of admission into the Union. This Constitution was a brief document modeled in many respects after that of the United States. The drafters recognized that conditions would change and included a provision for a later popular vote on the question of holding another convention to consider constitutional modifications.

In the first 8 years of statehood, the population of Kentucky increased at the rate of 27 percent per year. Changing conditions brought a demand for constitutional change. One controversy centered about the fact that the governor and state senators were not elected popularly, but were chosen by a body of electors. It was claimed that the Senate had aristocratic tendencies. This and the fact that most officials were appointed, and not elected, were not in keeping with the spirit of a rapidly expanding frontier.

The second Constitution, drafted by a convention sitting in Frankfort, was adopted in 1799. The governor, lieutenant governor, and senators were now to be elected by the state-at-large. The governor appointed all the judges, who held office during good behavior. Recognition of slavery was included. This provision had also been in the 1792 Constitution.

In accordance with the mode of revision specified in the 1799 Constitution, the question of calling a convention to amend that constitution was approved twice by the people in 1847 and 1848. The convention for this purpose met in Frankfort in 1849-1850. This body concerned itself principally with the institution of slavery; providing for the election of all officers, particularly judges, by the people; organization of the judicial branch; and the inhibition of the use of the credit of the state for internal improvements. This third Constitution was completed in 1850. Work on revising it was not to commence until the late summer of 1890.

Scene: The Old State Capitol
Capitol, Frankfort
September 8, 1890

The day was hot, toward the end of summer. Trees in the Capitol yard on Railroad Street were dusty, and horses clopped wearily down quiet Frankfort streets. More than a dozen passenger trains a day then passed through Frankfort, and for nearly a week, important people had been arriving from all parts of the state on the hot and grimy cars. A number came by turnpikes and on the steamboats that served the city back in the 1890s.

Ex-Governor J. Proctor Knott and Governor Simon Bolivar Buckner were delegates. William Goebel, doomed to be cut down by an assassin's bullet in another 10 years, Cassius M. Clay of Bourbon County, and a number of other leading political figures were in the group that included one person from each of Kentucky's 100 representative districts. They were assembling at Frankfort to write a constitution, and their work has outlasted the lives of all of them. After a year, marked at times by bitter wrangling and hours of oratory, they placed their signatures on a document that to this day affects the life of every Kentuckian.

The Constitutional Convention was called to order on September 8, in the House chamber on the second floor of the Old Capitol. Only after 226 days of sessions did the convention adjourn on September 28, 1891. In the meantime, it had done enough talking and writing to fill over 6,000 finely printed pages of paper, and it had drafted a constitution containing about 20,000 words.

How the 1890 Convention Came To Be Called

The 1850 Constitution had been adopted before the War Between the States. One section was aimed at protecting slavery, now a thing of the past. Other provisions left the General Assembly with almost unlimited power to enact special laws. Many parts of the Constitution were out of date, and the only way to change them was by calling a convention for the purpose of readopting, amending, or changing this Constitution.

The first attempt to call a convention was made in 1867. Two consecutive sessions of the General Assembly had to order a separate public vote on the question. At each of these elections, "a majority of those entitled to vote for Representatives" had to vote in favor of a convention. Then, a law finally could be passed to call a convention and provide for the election of 100 delegates. For 20 years, it had been impossible to get a favorable majority. The number of eligible voters was calculated from the local tax assessors' records, but many taxpayers did not vote. As a result, even when a majority of those voting favored a convention, they failed to add up to "a majority of those entitled to vote for Representatives."

In 1886, an act was passed that required all persons voting in the general election of 1887 to register at the time they cast their votes. By law, only those voters were declared eligible to vote for Representatives, which is one of the things they were doing at the 1887 election. Then, in 1888 and in 1889, referenda were held on the question of calling a convention. Each time, a majority of the "eligible voters" favored the proposal, so the General Assembly that met in the fall of 1889 passed a law calling for a constitutional convention

Economic and Social Conditions in Kentucky in the 1890s

Kentucky was an overwhelmingly rural state in 1890. Over 80 percent of its 1,858,000 people were farmers or residents of small rural communities, yet the impact of industrial development was affecting the thinking of the people. Railroads were opening up the coal fields. Timber resources were being exploited. Miles of turnpikes already linked many Kentucky communities, but the toll roads were provoking growing dissatisfaction. There were no automobiles, and the airplane was still a dream, along with radio, rocket ships, and the 40-hour work week. Only a few houses had running water; a few businesses had telephones; and few people had seen an electric light bulb. There were common schools but no compulsory education, and almost one-third of the population could not read. The cost of state government was about $3.5 million a year compared to more than $17 billion today.

Politically, two sets of forces were at work: the “corporations” that had developed into powerful interests since the 1850s and the “agrarians,” the large mass of ordinary people, sometimes puzzled about the effects of changing times on Kentucky’s government.

The corporations in their lusty fights for power and profit naturally tried to gain every possible advantage. Business combines were formed to control prices. Tax privileges were sought and sometimes bought. Cities and towns were persuaded or influenced into financing railroads, mills, and other business ventures. Largely because of this, the finances of many local governments were in chaos. A great number of Kentuckians felt that business literally was taking over the government. One speaker referred to the corporations as “...the hideous and dangerous spawn of inconsiderate legislation...” It was asserted that “...we have three houses in the legislative department of our State government: the Senate, the House of Representatives, and the Third House, and that the illegitimate monster unknown to the constitution of our fathers is the most potent of the three.”

These conditions had a great effect on the members of the 1890 Constitutional Convention. But at the very same time, the national government was starting to regulate business. The Interstate Commerce Commission had been established to regulate the railroads, and the Sherman Antitrust Act governing business combines and restraint of interstate commerce was passed in the same year that Kentucky’s convention met. Many of the problems that provoked the writers of the Constitution already were being faced at a higher governmental level.

Most of the delegates to the Constitutional Convention felt that the real root of Kentucky’s governmental problems was the almost unlimited power of the General Assembly. One of them even said that “...the principle, if not the sole, purpose of the constitution which we are here to frame, is to restrain its [the Legislature’s] will and restrict its authority.” The framers desired regulation of big business, and they placed the controls in the Constitution. They wished to make government more responsive to the people, and they provided for more elective officials. They also forbade these executive officers to serve more than one consecutive term in office. They wanted good officials, so they permitted the payment of substantial salaries. They overlooked, however, the effects of later economic changes that greatly lowered the value of the dollar.

They distrusted the General Assembly, so they wrote many details of law into the Constitution. They recognized the need for an easier way of changing it, so they inserted for the first time in any Kentucky Constitution a procedure for amending the basic law. They carefully designed the amendment provision, however, so that it would be much harder to change the Constitution than to change an ordinary statute. Apparently because they liked the new word better, they also changed the legal name of Kentucky! Instead of calling it a “State,” as the old Constitution did, they made it a “Commonwealth,” a more accurately descriptive term implying a separate political entity but not necessarily indicating complete sovereignty. Kentucky, Massachusetts, the Northern Mariana Islands, Pennsylvania, Puerto Rico, and Virginia officially are designated commonwealths.

Who were these 100 men who laid the foundation of our present Kentucky government? According to the record, 60 were lawyers, 20 were farmers, 13 were doctors, and 7 were bankers or merchants. Most of the delegates were middle aged or older. Quite a few were active in politics, and the delegates included a former Governor; a future Governor; and the Honorable Simon Bolivar Buckner, Governor at the time. No real radicals were in the group, and nearly all the delegates represented rural sections. Seven were from Jefferson County.

In general, these men were earnest, unselfish, and amazingly patient. They were willing to labor over thousands of different details for months. The earlier Constitutions had been drafted in only a few weeks. As they pursued their tedious labors in the stately Old Capitol, an industrial revolution was roaring round their heads while they groped for ways to deal with it.

The Document They Drafted

...a Constitution is not an ornament; it is not like a counterfeit presentment of some of our cherished dead; it is something we must use every moment; it is far less like a portrait than it is like a suit of clothes or a house...

Speech of Delegate E. J. McDermott
1890 Constitutional Convention

The job of the 1890-1891 Constitutional Convention was a big one. It was to rewrite much of the basic law of Kentucky by drafting a new constitution defining the powers of government and the rights of individuals.

The delegates did not have to start from the beginning. They had the Constitution of 1850 as a guide, as well as the constitutions of all the other states. Some very basic parts of the Constitution of Kentucky were completely beyond their power to change. These were the provisions of the the Constitution of the United States that apply to the states.

It is proper to say that part of Kentucky’s Constitution is actually contained in an entirely separate document, the Constitution of the United States, that provides in Article VI that:

This Constitution, and the Laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof, and all Treaties made... under the Authority of the United States, shall be the supreme Law of the Land; and the Judges in every State shall be bound thereby, any thing in the Constitution or Laws of any State to the Contrary notwithstanding.

In the first place, the United States Constitution gives certain powers to the national government and thereby denies some of these to Kentucky and the other states. These powers, among others, include the regulation of foreign and interstate commerce, naturalization and bankruptcy laws, and establishment of post offices and post roads.

The federal Constitution also forbids the states' doing certain things such as making a treaty, coining money, impairing the obligation of contract, imposing a duty on imports or exports, and declaring war. States may not infringe upon certain rights granted to the people; they may not, for example, deprive a person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law or deny equal protection of law. Finally, the U.S. Constitution guarantees each state a republican form of government.

Within these limits and those practical limitations imposed by the attitudes and circumstances of the day, the framers were free to do anything they desired. Under the federal Constitution, "The powers not delegated to the United States...nor prohibited...to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people." The Kentucky Constitutional Convention thus had a wide range of discretion. The task of the delegates was to define the organization of the government and its three major branches: executive, legislative, and judicial. In addition, it had to spell out, and limit, the powers of the government.

This concept of placing limitations on the powers of government is important. The states and the people have all the powers not assigned to the national government. As a result, one state owns a major railroad line. Another one set up a chain of grain elevators. Kentucky, back in the early 19th century, built and operated a series of locks and dams on the state's waterways. One important part of the Constitution is the specific limitations and prohibitions it contains, but, in a sense, every positive grant of power in a state constitution is also a limitation. When the framers wrote, for instance, that "The legislative power shall be vested in a House of Representatives and a Senate...", " they prohibited the establishment of a single-chamber legislature such as Nebraska's. When the writers of the Constitution said nothing about a state corporation income tax, in effect they permitted such a tax to be adopted later, simply by not having forbidden it.

The men who labored through the year on Kentucky's Constitution came up with a document containing an enormous array of detail on many phases of state government. Particular emphasis was placed upon the powers and duties of the General Assembly, and these were spelled out in great detail.

Contents of Kentucky's Constitution

When the delegates left for home on April 11, 1891, their completed draft of the proposed constitution contained 272 sections, under 22 different headings. It was ready for printing and submission to the voters. The document defined and distributed the powers of the state among its governmental branches, set forth the powers and duties of local government, and the rights of individuals. In addition, it contained a mass of legislative detail.

Bill of Rights

The Bill of Rights is the first major section. Section 4 has this revolutionary statement:

All power is inherent in the people, and all free governments are founded on their authority and instituted for their peace, safety, happiness and the protection of property. For the advancement of these ends, they have at all times an inalienable and indefeasible right to alter, reform or abolish their government in such manner as they may deem proper.

Section 4 was to be the legal basis for submitting a complete revision of the Constitution directly to the people in 1967. This attempt at general revision is discussed in the last part of this essay. But the Constitution also includes a rather difficult and slow-moving amending procedure.

Much of the material in the Bill of Rights was taken from the Constitution of 1850. Despite this, the delegates spent almost 2 months in debate and argument over this part of the Constitution. Examination of Kentucky's Bill of Rights will show that it contains a number of important provisions, such as religious freedom, and the right to trial by jury. Today, important protection against the violation of civil rights by the states is found in the 14th Amendment of the federal Constitution, as interpreted and applied by Congress and the courts.

Distribution of Powers

The structure and powers of Kentucky government were definitely modified by the work of the 1890 Convention. The traditional three branches of government—the legislative to make the laws, the executive to enforce the laws, and the judicial to interpret laws and rights—were, of course, retained, along with the plan that each branch would be checked and balanced by the other two.

The legislative branch was drastically affected by the work of the delegates to the 1890 Convention. The framers of the Constitution prohibited special laws applicable only to one city, town, or county. They went even a step further, and enumerated 28 subjects on which special legislation was forbidden. The last session of the General Assembly under the 1850 Constitution had passed 1,926 acts, only 117 of which affected more than one county in Kentucky!

The delegates provided for the classification of cities on the basis of population, so that the different problems and needs of larger and smaller communities could be met and the evils of special legislation avoided at the same time.

The new Constitution also limited the regular sessions of the General Assembly to 60 days each 2 years. Under the old Constitution, the legislators could vote to stay in session for more than 60 days, and they often did. A 2000 constitutional amendment added an odd-year session of 30 days to the existing 60-day even-year session.

Legislators and other public officials were forbidden to continue to accept free passes and other privileges from the railroads. A specific constitutional provision reestablished the old State Railroad Commission, and a large amount of the General Assembly's former authority to regulate and grant privileges to railroads was eliminated. Over 30 sections of the new Constitution covered railroads and corporations generally, and in one sweeping provision all their previous grants of special or exclusive privilege were abolished, undoing much of the work of earlier legislatures.

The executive branch was not greatly changed. The governor was granted an additional veto power to reject individual items in appropriations bills. Two more elective state officials were included in the Constitution: a secretary of state and a commissioner of agriculture, labor and statistics. (The latter office is now generally referred to as the commissioner of agriculture; the commissioner of labor is a statutory office.) In addition, the framers of the new Constitution gave the Governor the duty of informing the General Assembly "...on the state of the Commonwealth..." and making recommendations for action on its part.

When the convention sat, the officers of the state were few in number and the officials provided for in the Constitution undoubtedly were intended to be the major departmental officers. Yet, in drafting the document, the delegates realized that there might be a need for additional officials, so they provided for the appointment or election of "inferior officers." The delegates did this in an offhand manner, without even debating the provision. Today those "inferior officers" are the heads of virtually every major state department.

As the state government has taken on a growing number of programs, there has been a strong trend toward the creation of appointive statutory offices. Except in agriculture, appointive officers now are responsible for most of the state's executive functions. One of the biggest developments in the work of the executive branch has taken place under the phrase "inferior officers," which was placed in the 1891 Constitution with only the most casual consideration.

The judicial branch underwent one major modification at the hands of the framers of the 1891 Constitution: the General Assembly was forbidden to create any courts in addition to those provided for in the Constitution. As a result, the Superior Court was abolished. Under the old Constitution, there had been two "supreme courts" in the state, the Superior Court and the Court of Appeals. The Superior Court, created by the General Assembly, had final jurisdiction over matters where the amount of money involved was small. This division of justice between so-called poor man's court and rich man's court was denounced thoroughly at the convention.

A great deal of debate and discussion concerned constitutional provisions governing the local courts. Dozens of special courts had been created by laws to serve individual communities. Their powers and jurisdictions were confused. The delegates provided for a somewhat overlapping set of quarterly courts, county courts, justice of the peace courts, and police courts. The new Constitution also permitted the payment of prosecutors and justices by fees that gave them a direct monetary interest in securing convictions. The Court of Appeals decided, in December 1956 that this age-old method of compensating justices on the basis of finding people guilty deprived defendants of due process of law.

The judicial branch underwent another major overhaul in 1976, after voters in the preceding general election approved a constitutional amendment to vest the judicial power of the Commonwealth exclusively in one Court of Justice, divided into a Supreme Court, a Court of Appeals, a trial court of general jurisdiction (circuit courts), and a trial court of limited jurisdiction (district courts). The amendment contained many provisions similar to those that had been proposed 10 years earlier by a Constitution Revision Assembly.

Members of the Court of Appeals at the time the amendment was adopted became members of the new Supreme Court. All statutes which applied to the Court of Appeals and all cases pending before it were transferred to the Supreme Court as well. However, where the old Court of Appeals was required to hear appeals in all criminal and many civil cases, the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court was limited to appeals in certain criminal cases (those involving judgments imposing a sentence of death, life imprisonment, or imprisonment for 20 years) and such other cases as its rules might provide.

The amendment established a new Court of Appeals consisting, initially, of 14 members, but whose size could be altered subsequently by the General Assembly at the request of the Supreme Court. The amendment provided for the new court to divide itself into panels of not less than three judges in order to expedite its work. Jurisdiction of the new court was left to the General Assembly to determine. The changes in the appellate system were necessitated by problems that had arisen since 1891, due largely to population growth and an increase in the various phases of modern life that required government regulation. These problems had resulted in case backlogs, which delayed the hearing of appeals for several years in some cases.

Circuit courts were altered little by the amendment. The principal change involved their funding. When previously the courts were financed through a combination of revenue derived from fees, fines and forfeitures collected by the courts and supplemental funds from the state and the counties in which they were located, the amendment required that the courts be entirely state supported.

A major provision of the amendment was the establishment of district courts throughout the Commonwealth to replace locally administered quarterly courts, county courts as judicial bodies, justices' courts, and police courts. Because of the complexity of implementing this portion of the amendment, its effective date was put off until 2 years after the rest of the amendment took effect.

The amendment made several other important changes in the judicial branch as well. It provided for the nonpartisan election of all judges and established judicial nominating commissions to make recommendations for filling vacant judgeships. It required, for the first time, that all judges be lawyers, a requirement only of Court of Appeals and circuit court judges previously. It prohibited judges, while on the bench, from practicing law, running for elective office other than judicial office, or holding any office in a political party or organizations. It designated the chief justice of the Commonwealth as the executive head of the Court of Justice, requiring the chief justice to submit a budget for the entire court system and to perform all other necessary administrative functions relating to the system. It abolished the clerk of the Court of Appeals as an elective office, but designated the clerk elected at the time the amendment was adopted to serve as clerk of the Supreme Court for the 4 years for which he was elected.

[Throughout the remainder of this essay, the highest court is referred to as the Supreme Court.]

A 2002 Constitutional Amendment permits the Supreme Court to designate one or more divisions of the circuit court as a family court division that shall retain the jurisdiction of the circuit court and have additional jurisdiction as provided by the General Assembly.

Education

A new policy was written into the Kentucky Constitution that the General Assembly should "...provide for an efficient system of common schools throughout the state..." The old Constitution had contained merely a provision for distributing the proceeds of the state Common School Fund. This fund originally had been established in 1837. In it was placed $850,000 of the money given to Kentucky by the national government from the proceeds of public land sales. This money was soon "borrowed" by the state to finance extensive internal improvements. The state later refused to pay interest on this money, and the bonds showing that the money had been borrowed were burned by order of the Governor.

The 1848 General Assembly corrected this situation. New bonds were issued to cover interest due on the school fund, and a 2-cent property tax was levied for a system of common schools. The drafters of the 1850 Constitution included a section making the capital of this Common School Fund "inviolable," a permanent and perpetual obligation of the state. The earnings of the fund were to be distributed equitably to each county. The 1891 Constitution retained the school fund provisions and supplemented them by the now famous section 186, which provided that "Each county in the Commonwealth shall be entitled to its proportion of the school fund on its census of pupil children for each school year..."

As a result of this provision, subsequently amended in 1941 and 1949, the basic measure of a local government's eligibility for school funds until 1954 was the number of school-age children it contained, rather than the number of students in schools.

The voters, at the 1953 election, approved a basic amendment to Section 186 of the Constitution. This amendment repealed the per capita distribution of school funds and permitted the General Assembly by general law to prescribe the manner of distribution of the Common School Fund. The General Assembly in 1954 adopted, and in 1956 financed fully, a foundation program for education under which school funds are distributed on the basis of school needs and attendance.

Generally speaking, the actions of the convention helped bring the Constitution up to date in the field of education, by recognizing as a state responsibility a program that had been developing for over 50 years.

The framers of the new Constitution also provided that equal but separate school facilities should be maintained for white and black children. Recent United States Supreme Court decisions, holding that separate facilities based on race are in themselves unequal, have altered drastically the application of this provision and the segregated schools requirement was removed from the Constitution in 1996.

Almost 60 years before the modern controversy about separation of church and state, the delegates wrote that no portion of the school fund "...shall be appropriated to, or used by, or in aid of any church, sectarian or denominational school.” The delegates also decided to continue the provision under which the superintendent of public instruction is an elective rather than appointive office.

The issue of public versus private higher education was vital at the time of the convention. The State Agricultural and Mechanical College had been growing rapidly. Numerous private sectarian colleges also existed throughout the state, and some of them were not in the best financial circumstances. Their supporters opposed and lobbied against extended public facilities. Others were against state colleges in principle. As Delegate Robert Rodes of Bowling Green put it:

It is a question of pure, practical common sense...that all the State can or ought to do properly is to give to every child within its borders a good, thorough common school education.

Opposition over the issue became rather bitter at times, but the supporters of private colleges won an apparent victory, since they managed to insert in the constitution a provision that any proposed new taxes for higher education must be submitted to the voters for prior approval a provision that, however, has had little actual effect on the development of our state colleges and universities.

Local Government

The prohibition against special legislation, already mentioned, was among the most significant actions taken in this field.

In discussing the relation of the Constitution to local government in Kentucky, it is important to note that local units, such as counties, cities, and school districts, are legally subdivisions of the state government. They derive their power from the state, and can do only those things specifically permitted by the Constitution and the General Assembly.

The new Constitution abolished all the old city charters and required the General Assembly to enact general laws to replace the special acts granting charters to individual municipalities. The authors of the Constitution recognized that the problems and needs of smaller towns were different from those of large cities. So they set up in the Constitution six different classes of cities, based on their population. General laws could at least be tailored to the differing needs of each class of city, but no law could be made to apply to less than a whole class. An amendment adopted in 1994 authorized the General Assembly to classify cities based not only on population, but also by taking into account a city’s tax base, form of government, geography, or any other reasonable basis. In the interest of limiting the power of elected officials, mayors of cities of the first and second classes were prohibited from serving consecutive terms. This constitutional prohibition remained in effect until 1986, when voters ratified an amendment permitting these mayors to run for a maximum of three consecutive terms.

Other sections of the Constitution set forth a general pattern of organization for cities, and established limits on their tax rates and borrowing powers. Because of the delegates’ concern over the regulation and control of business, they included a provision forbidding any city or local governmental unit to grant a franchise or privilege for more than 20 years. In addition, the Constitution required that such franchises be awarded to the “highest and best bidder,” to discourage concessions by city fathers to influential interests.

The framers of the 1891 Constitution spent long weeks of deliberation over provisions affecting county government. Clearly, they regarded the counties as among the most important units of the state government. At the time of the convention this was a valid attitude. The counties collected most of the property taxes, and most of the taxes levied at that time were property taxes. They provided whatever welfare services there were, enforced law and order, handled most of the court cases arising in the state, and were just beginning to take on responsibility for a function of prime importance—the construction and maintenance of a system of public roads. Furthermore, the political foundations of the state were strongly embedded in the county governments, as they still tend to be today. County political office was a stepping stone to greater things, and the state political organizations were to a large degree built out of county-level support. Unlike the initial prohibition against succession by mayors of cities of the first and second classes, all county officers except sheriffs were permitted to serve consecutive terms. In 1986, an amendment permitting sheriffs to immediately succeed themselves in office was ratified by the voters.

The Constitution provided for the election of practically every county official, and continued the arrangement for governing the counties by fiscal courts made up of the county judge (now called county judge/executive) plus from three to eight magistrates, who are also the local justices of the peace. The framers added a section permitting a county to elect three commissioners, from the county at large, to replace the magistrates and to provide a more modern form of government. Only 7 counties currently have this arrangement.

Since 1891, a vast change has come about in the character of our government. Counties are no longer the chief administrative arms of state government. Most of their functions are either shared with or supervised by the state and some of their traditional duties have been abandoned as a result of the centralizing tendencies of the last quarter-century. Perhaps one of the greatest strengths of our counties lies in their importance to the political organization of the state, for without such organization a prime characteristic of democratic government undoubtedly would be lost.

Many county officers still derive income from fees. At the time the present Constitution was written no thought was given to changing this arrangement, but a restriction was placed on the handling of fees in large cities and counties because it was alleged that certain officers in Jefferson County were making as much as $50,000 a year from fees in 1890! The Constitution set a maximum limit of $5,000 on the compensation of all officials and employees, including those of local government. The limit for local officers was raised to $7,200 by a 1949 amendment. A Supreme Court decision, however, has in effect raised this maximum. The court held that $7,200, in terms of 1949 values, could be related to the purchasing power of the dollar at the present time.

Government Finances

About 70 percent of Kentucky's state tax revenue came from property taxes in 1890. Land and property were still the predominant sources of wealth in the state, and the property tax was not regarded as inequitable. The delegates were thoroughly aroused over the manner in which corporations had been escaping taxation. More than $232 million worth of corporation property was untaxed because it was "devoted to a public purpose." The framers provided that all property be taxed at a uniform rate, whether it was a highly profitable business or a small farm. Many members of the convention were in favor of exempting absolutely no property from taxation, and the question of taxing churches was discussed seriously and at length. A limited exemption was finally included, applicable to

...places actually used for religious worship...not exceeding one-half acre in cities or towns, and not exceeding two acres in the country; places of burial..., institutions of purely public charity, [and] institutions of education not used or employed for gain....

A 1990 amendment to Section 170 provides an exemption for all real property owned and occupied by, and all tangible and intangible personal property owned by, institutions of religion. A 1998 amendment to Section 170 permits the General Assembly to exempt motor vehicles and other personal property from property tax and also extends the Homestead Exemption to persons classified as totally disabled by any public or private retirement system.

Over the years, one of the real strictures on financing local governments and local school districts was the low level of assessment; generally property has been assessed at less than 30 percent of its true value. This resulted in limiting the taxing power of local governments and, in effect, made the tax assessor the overall shaper of public finance policy. The Supreme Court in 1965, in an historic decision, held that the Constitution meant precisely what is said, in this instance, that property must be assessed at 100 percent of its true value. This decision has meant that local governments have had available to them a greater potential of property tax revenues and a greater potential of full faith and credit indebtedness.

The maximum tax rates of counties, cities, towns, and taxing districts were written into Section 157 of the Constitution, but no property tax limit was set on the state or on school districts. Very little was said about other possible forms of taxation, such as those on income, which in effect left the state government free to impose them, but a great deal was included in the Constitution concerning borrowing by both the state and localities. Recalling vividly how the state had its fingers burned in the early 19th century, and determined to prevent wild spending for public works, the framers retained a constitutional provision forbidding the state to go into debt more than $500,000.

This rigorous provision has been weakened by court cases. Revenue bonds, interest bearing warrants, and holding company bonds have been interpreted as not falling within the constitutional debt limit because they are not guaranteed by the full faith and credit of the Commonwealth. Finally, the Constitution prohibited the General Assembly from giving financial assistance to local governments except in the case of schools. State grants-in-aid, state taxes for local purposes, and any loan of the state's credit to localities were forbidden.

The authors of the 1891 Constitution were concerned largely with the big financial problems of the day as they saw them. These were in the field of local government. Ironically, in dealing with them, they tied the cities and counties to a property tax base that in only a few decades was to become somewhat obsolete, as new forms of wealth came into existence. They were not much concerned with the then less important matter of state government finances. As a result the state has been free to exploit new fields of taxation as needs have developed and times have changed.

Elections

One highly significant change in elections was made: the old method of “viva voce” voting, or voice voting, was replaced by the secret Australian ballot. Only mute persons could vote by ballot under the 1850 Constitution.

Two principles guided the delegates in drafting provisions for elections: a belief that as many officials as possible should be elected, since the average person should be capable of filling governmental offices, and a belief that democracy and honesty as well are fostered by rotation in office. The old Constitution permitted certain state officials to run for reelection without limit. A state treasurer, known as “Honest Dick Tate,” had been elected nine times before the discovery that he had absconded with thousands of dollars from the State Treasury. The governor, lieutenant governor, other state constitutional officers, as well as all judges, court clerks, and local officials are elective under the provisions of the present Constitution, and statewide elected constitutional officers were prohibited from being reelected to two consecutive terms. An amendment adopted in 1992 permits statewide officers elected in 1995 and thereafter to serve two consecutive terms.

Kentucky had always taken a rather liberal position regarding the right to vote, in contrast to many other states. Property ownership or the prior payment of taxes has never been a voting qualification. The 1850 Constitution gave the vote to “every free white male citizen who met residence requirements.” The 15th Amendment to the United States Constitution, which came later, forbade any state to deny a person the right to vote because of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. The authors of the 1891 Constitution of Kentucky never attempted to circumvent this amendment, as some states have done, by the use of burdensome residence and registration requirements.

The voting rights of women had not been established in 1891, and the new Constitution limited the voting privilege to men as a matter of course. In 1920, the U.S. Constitution was amended to permit women to vote. Interestingly enough, Kentucky’s Constitution contained an obsolete “male suffrage” provision until 1955 when the Constitution was amended to lower the voting age to age 18. Only then was the “male” requirement eliminated. An amendment to delete it was defeated in 1923. The 1891 Constitution had given women the right to vote in school elections, as they had been doing in some parts of the state.

At least two efforts were made to secure honest elections. Voters in cities and towns of 5,000 or more people were required to register, and registration was made permissive in the rest of Kentucky. Because of the distrust of big business that characterized the convention, any corporation convicted of trying to influence the outcome of an election was required to surrender its charter. This latter clause was invoked after the 1927 gubernatorial race, but the corporation involved surrendered its charter voluntarily and dissolved itself into subsidiary organizations.

The Constitution made no provision for political parties or primaries, which are a nomination process. In 1890, political parties chose their candidates at conventions. Today's Kentucky primaries are established by statutory provisions.

Historically, every year was an election year in the Commonwealth. Since 1891, state and local elections in Kentucky have fallen in the odd-numbered years, while the election of national officers takes place in the even ones. This came about because, at the time the Constitution was being written, a bill was pending in Congress that would have given the national government extensive control over any election at which a national officer was being chosen. By keeping state and local elections separate from national races, the danger that they might be subject to federal supervision was eliminated. In 1979, an amendment was adopted that shifted elections for members of the General Assembly from odd to even years. An amendment ratified in 1992 moved all elections held in odd-numbered years to even-numbered years, except for elections for statewide constitutional officers. As a result, no elections will be held in one year of the 4-year election cycle, with 1997 being the first election-free year.

The Amending Process

The proposal and adoption of amendments to the Constitution were provided for in the document prepared in 1890 and 1891. The earlier Kentucky Constitutions had contained no such provision. But they were much shorter than the 1891 Constitution, and contained little detail. As a result, the need for amending them was somewhat less.

The amendment question was thoroughly debated, and the general sentiment of the convention was that individual amendments should be permitted, but the process should be difficult enough to prevent arbitrary and capricious change.

Faith in the intelligence of the people and their ability to govern themselves was not wanting. A few members of the delegation argued for a simple and direct way of changing the Constitution. In a stirring, prophetic speech, delegate A. J. Auxier argued that:

There is nothing so sacred about any of this Constitution but what the people can alter, modify or change, and adapt it to the wants of the people when the emergency arises.... We are simply the representatives of the people. They sent us here to form a Constitution; not for the government of all the generations yet unborn, but to prepare a Constitution suitable for the government of the people at the present time.

Many changes have occurred since the Convention of 1849....The people have become more enlightened....Great strides of progress have been made...and the Constitution that they framed then was not, in all things, adaptable to the present wants of the people of this State.

Are we going to arrogate ourselves to the assumption that we today are more enlightened than they will be fifty years from today?....

I predict that, before another Constitutional Convention shall be assembled in this hall, men will be navigating the air, instead of traveling in railroad coaches; that instead of going thirty or forty miles an hour, they will go two hundred miles an hour, and hundreds and thousands of unthought of things will be brought into existence; and new fields of operation and new systems of governments, or modifications, at least, will be required in those days yet to come....We want to make some changes in our Constitution to adjust it to the present wants of the people. Why not give future generations the right to do the same?

The final outcome was an amendment procedure a little less difficult than in many states and less restrictive than the original proposals considered by the delegates.

An amendment adopted in 1979 increased from two to four the number of amendments that can appear on the ballot at an election, beginning in 1980. An exception was 1982, a year of transition, when no amendment could appear on the ballot. The 1979 amendment also deleted the prohibition on resubmission of a failed amendment within five years. In addition this amendment permits specifically the amendment or modification of as many articles and sections as may be necessary to accomplish the objectives of the amendment, provided each treat a single subject or related subject matters. The 1980 General Assembly placed two amendments on the ballot; one amendment appeared in 1984 and two amendments were on the ballot in 1986. In 1988, two amendments appeared and passed with wide margins. For the first time, voters in the 1990 elections were presented with four proposed amendments, with only one being approved. Three proposed amendments appeared on the ballot in 1992. One amendment was placed on the ballot in 1994, 1996, 2004, and 2012; and two were placed on the ballot in 1998, 2000, and 2002.

General Provisions

Numerous miscellaneous provisions were included in the document. Generally, they relate to specific issues of the time, and some of them now seem quaint and out of place. Included was a prohibition against lotteries. These often had been used to finance schools, streets, and even seminaries in the early 19th century. The prohibition was removed by the voters in 1988, and in 1992 charitable gaming was authorized. Each person holding public office was required to swear that he had not taken part in a duel, and armed bands of men were forbidden to come into the state. This latter provision was aimed at the squads of detectives and other groups sometimes brought in during labor strife.

A suggestive flash of foresight is reflected in a requirement that "...the General Assembly shall...fix the minimum ages at which children may be employed in places dangerous to life or health, or injurious to morals...." The purpose of this provision was to permit the General Assembly to outlaw the evils of child labor. This was one of the first steps toward the broad blanket of laws and regulations which now protect the safety and health of our children.

A sincere interest in child welfare led to a provision for the establishment of Houses of Reform for children under age 18. This was a step forward for Kentucky, and the debates on the proposal are full of gruesome illustrations of the need for such an institution. At the time, even young children were often sentenced to the penitentiary, where their services might be sold to contractors who used them on chain gangs. One delegate told of seeing four boys under the age of 12, shackled together in chains, being transported to prison by train. Another mentioned a 16-year-old who had been crushed and horribly crippled while doing convict labor on a construction job. Partially as a result of such conditions, the framers also wrote into the Constitution a prohibition against the sale of prison labor to private contractors.

Finally, the convention helped settle once and for all a debate that had gone on for almost a hundred years: the location of the State Capital. Lexington wanted it, Louisville wanted it, and other cities also submitted their bids; but under Section 255, the Capital was to be located permanently at Frankfort unless removed by a two-thirds vote of each house of the 1891 General Assembly. Frankfort retained the Capital because of the zealous efforts of its citizens, and because neither Louisville nor Lexington supporters would give in to each other.

Getting the New Constitution Approved

At noon on April 11, 1891, after 7 months of tedious work, the delegates filed to the front of the House chamber in the Old Capitol and signed the proposed Constitution. In a brief farewell address, President Cassius M. Clay adjourned the convention until the first Wednesday in September. As he put it, “The Constitution is now signed. Our work is done....”

A great deal of work remained, however, before the draft was finally to become the fourth Constitution of Kentucky. By the time the convention adjourned, the people of the state were rather fed up with the whole business of revising the Constitution. They felt that too much time had been spent on the job, and from some quarters there was strong opposition to portions of the draft. Many leading newspapers throughout Kentucky were against adoption. “Marse Henry” Watterson, editor of The Louisville Courier-Journal, called it “...confusion worse confounded.” It looked as though the voters were going to reject the proposed Constitution at the election of August 3.

Leading delegates took to the stump in behalf of their work. Gubernatorial candidates of both parties came out in favor of adoption. The opposition faded away. When all the votes were in, the count stood 213,432 in favor of the new Constitution, and only 74,017 opposed.

The Post-ratification Session of the Constitutional Convention

The delegates came together once more in September to celebrate their victory, and to make “...such alterations and amendments as are necessary to correct the style, remove ambiguities, and improve the phraseology of the Constitution.” They agreed that it would be “...improper and a breach of faith for this Convention to now incorporate or make any radical change in the Constitution as approved by the people....”

The delegates struggled with their desires and consciences for a while, and then set to work on the Constitution. They did not finish until September 28. When this second session ended, the Constitution was a better, more polished document. It was also somewhat different from the draft that the voters had ratified. Instead of 272 sections, it had 263.

The delegates, on their own initiative, wrote in provisions forbidding the superintendent of public instruction, the auditor of public accounts, and the clerk of the Supreme Court to succeed themselves in office. Members of the Railroad Commission were made elective instead of appointive. A requirement that appointive state officials be confirmed by the Senate was dropped. An entirely new section was added, requiring the General Assembly to provide for local option elections on the sale of alcoholic beverages.

These revisions were never submitted to the people for ratification. The statute calling for the convention had required that "...before any Constitution agreed upon by said Convention shall take effect or become operative, the same shall be submitted to the qualified voters of this Commonwealth..." The old Constitution, however, did not require any such ratification; and when the last minute changes were challenged a year later, the Supreme Court held that the convention had not exceeded its authority in making these revisions. The main argument of the court was that to throw out the changes would be to "bring confusion and anarchy upon the State."

The Mystery of the Missing Constitution

After the long, hectic work of the convention, an original copy of the document was written out "in a fine script hand" by William Randall Ramsey, the delegate from Laurel and Rockcastle Counties. And on Monday, September 28, 1891, at 4:30 p.m., 96 delegates marched to the clerk's desk to sign this copy personally. On that same day, a committee of three members delivered the document to the Secretary of State, who issued a receipt for it.

But the only "original" copy of the 1891 Constitution now on file at Frankfort, at the Kentucky Historical Society in the Old Capitol, is a typewritten document apparently copied from the original. For nearly a century, the signed, hand-written copy of our present Constitution has been missing.

For that matter, the original draft of Kentucky's Constitution of 1850 has also disappeared from sight. And only in 1948 were the original copies of Kentucky's first two Constitutions (of 1792 and 1799) secretly returned to the Governor by an unnamed person who obtained the documents in an unrevealed manner.

Perhaps some day our present Constitution will be returned in a similar fashion. Or it may turn up in a musty pile of long forgotten papers. It may have been destroyed. At some point it was apparently stolen by a collector of historical documents or, to use the words of a writer who has explored the mystery of the missing Constitution, it may have been "rescued from imminent destruction."

In any case, the government of Kentucky continues to operate, unhampered by the fact that we have only a "carbon copy" of our most basic law.

Proposals for Change Since 1892

Amendment

Eighteen months of continuous legislative session were required to bring the laws of the state into some semblance of conformity with the new Constitution. Only a few weeks were enough to point up some basic defects in the document.

A fight that continued for 24 years began over the requirement that all property be taxed at a uniform rate, and an amendment was finally adopted in 1915 permitting the classification of property for taxation purposes. As early as 1903 an amendment was passed to permit cities to tax personal property on the basis of income, or through licenses or franchises, instead of levying a straight ad valorem tax. In 1909 another change was made, to allow counties to levy additional taxes for construction and maintenance of the public roads, which were becoming so important to the economy of the state. The same amendment permitted state grants to the counties for this function.

Altogether, the people have seen fit to amend the Constitution 41 times. An amendment was necessary to permit the state to adopt a public assistance program in the 1930's. The Constitution was changed to require the earmarking of gasoline and motor vehicle taxes for the highway program. On three different occasions the state common school fund provision has been changed, in an effort to distribute more school money on the basis of differing local needs. The maximum salary limit of state and local officials and employees has been revised. In 1955, the minimum voting age was lowered from age 21 to age 18, and household furnishings were exempted from the property tax.

A 1969 amendment requires farm land to be assessed according to the land's value for agricultural or horticultural use. The amendment also permits the General Assembly to provide reasonable differences in tax rates within a taxing district based upon the governmental services rendered. Older Kentuckians benefited from a 1971 amendment that exempted from taxation up to $6,500 of the assessed value of a single family residence owned and occupied by a person 65 or older. The exemption was extended to other types of residences in 1975, and to certain disabled residents in 1981. The judicial system was reconstructed in 1975.

An amendment ratified in 1979 changed the election of General Assembly members from odd-numbered to even-numbered years, established a 10-day planning session of the General Assembly in odd-numbered years, and extended the period during which the General Assembly can meet. Under the provisions of this amendment, the General Assembly still is to meet for 60 legislative days beginning the first Tuesday after the first Monday in January in even-numbered years. However, now any day on which neither chamber convenes is not counted in the total, and the session can thus be extended until April 15. With this flexibility, the General Assembly can now pass all legislation, recess for the 10-day period during which the governor may exercise the veto power, and then reconvene to consider overriding the governor's vetoes.

In 1984, the voters approved an amendment that permitted sheriffs to succeed themselves; and in 1986, succession was also approved for mayors of cities of the first and second classes, permitting them to run for election for three successive terms.

The people gave their approval in 1988 to two proposals that had generated heated debate for many years: the broadform deed and lottery amendments. Under Section 19, as amended, mining of coal pursuant to any broadform deed is to be limited to methods of coal extraction utilized in the area at the time the deed was executed. The other amendment revised Section 226 to authorize the General Assembly to establish a state lottery as a mechanism for generating revenue. In extraordinary session in November 1988, the legislature enacted legislation that created the Kentucky lottery. In 1990, the voters approved an amendment to Section 170 relating to tax exemptions for property owned by institutions of religion.

Two amendments were ratified by the voters in 1992. The first amended Section 226, relating to lotteries, to authorize the General Assembly to enact laws permitting and regulating the conduct of charitable gaming. The second made numerous changes affecting the executive and legislative branches of government and eliminated elections in one year of the 4-year election cycle. The amendment required the joint election of the governor and lieutenant governor; permitted statewide constitutional officers to serve two consecutive terms, beginning with those officers elected in 1995; allowed the governor to retain the powers of the office when absent from the state; provided a procedure for determining whether the governor is unable to carry out the duties of the office; removed the lieutenant governor as presiding officer of the Senate and allowed the governor to assign duties to the lieutenant governor in addition to those prescribed by law; abolished the offices of superintendent of Public instruction and register of the Land Office; permitted the Senate to confirm appointments to state boards and commissions; and moved all elections to even-numbered years, except those for statewide constitutional office.

In 1994, Section 156 was repealed and a new Section 156a authorized the General Assembly to provide for the creation, organization, and governance of cities and to establish classifications of cities based on population, tax base, form of government, geography, or any other reasonable basis. The classifications that were in effect when the amendment was adopted would remain in force until changed by the General Assembly. A new Section 156b established a constitutional foundation for the city home rule statutes enacted by the General Assembly in 1980, by authorizing the General Assembly to permit cities to exercise any power and perform any function within their boundaries that serves a public purpose. Section 157 was amended to relax the restrictions on incurring long-term debt, allowing local governments to finance public projects for more than 1 year without having voter approval. Additionally, a new section 157b was added to the Constitution to clearly specify that cities, counties, and taxing districts must adopt a balanced budget for each fiscal year. That is, a budget in which expenditures to be made for the fiscal year do not exceed the revenues to be received for that fiscal year. The budget could be revised as needed within a fiscal year, but still must be balanced after the revision. An amendment to Section 158 changes the language regarding debt limits to base them on population alone, rather than on the class of city, and allows the General Assembly to establish additional limits on debt capacity.

In 1996, two provisions of the Constitution, Sections 180 and 187, were amended to remove language that allowed a local government to levy a poll tax on each person residing within the county or the city, and remove language requiring that separate schools for “white” and “colored” children be maintained. In 1998, Section 170 was amended to permit the General Assembly to exempt motor vehicles and other personal property from the property tax, and to extend the Homestead Exemption to persons classified as totally disabled by any public or private retirement system.

In 2000, Sections 36 and 42 were amended to provide that the General Assembly would meet in annual session in odd-numbered years for 30 days, provide that bills raising revenue or appropriating funds in an odd-numbered year session shall be agreed to by three-fifths of all members elected to each House, and provide that an odd-numbered year session shall adjourn by March 30. Also in 2000, Sections 201, 209, and 218 were amended to abolish the elected Railroad Commission, and its duties were transferred to an existing state agency.

In 2002, Section 112 was amended to permit the Supreme Court to designate one or more divisions of the circuit court as a family court division that shall retain the jurisdiction of the circuit court and have additional jurisdiction as provided by the General Assembly. Additionally, in 2002, the provisions of Sections 190, 191, 192, 193, 194, 198, 200, 202, 203, 207, and 208 relating to corporations were repealed and replaced with a general provision in Section 190 that permits the General Assembly to regulate corporations’ powers, rights, duties, and liabilities by general laws.

In 2004, Section 233A was created to define marriage as a relationship between one man and one woman and to provide that only a marriage between one man and one woman would be valid or recognized in Kentucky. Section 233A also provides that a legal status identical or similar to that of marriage for unmarried individuals is invalid and will not be recognized by the Commonwealth.

In 2012, Section 225A amended the Constitution to create a Kentucky citizen’s right to hunt, fish, and harvest wildlife using traditional methods.

Thirty-eight proposed amendments have been rejected by the voters, including 4 that would have liberalized the process of amending the Constitution, the last in 1963. Four other proposals were thrown out on technical grounds. The basic provisions of 16 of these 38 proposals have been incorporated in amendments that finally were adopted. Rejected proposals included: requiring persons who have not paid their taxes to be prohibited from voting; abolishing the elective office of the superintendent of public instruction; giving local governments the power to reorganize; requiring voice voting instead of secret ballot; authorizing a compulsory workers’ compensation law; reducing the number of elected state executive officers to the governor, lieutenant governor, attorney general, and auditor; permitting the General Assembly to set the salary of all public officers and employees; in 1969 and 1973; permitting the General Assembly to call itself into special session; and permitting the General Assembly to reject administrative regulations issued by an agency of the executive branch.

The amending process never really has had a fair trial under the current Constitution. Most amendments submitted related to particular problems of a particular time. The present amending process would permit revision of a complete article by way of a single amendment. This approach is all the more important in light of failures to revise the Constitution by calling a convention or direct submission of a new document to the people. The General Assembly did not submit constitutional amendments to the people either in 1965 or in 1967. A general policy agreement was reached to hold off submitting amendments pending the outcome of the work of the Constitution Revision Assembly. As mentioned earlier, no amendments were submitted in 1982 either.

Constitutional Convention

On four occasions, steps have been taken to call a constitutional convention, the most recent being November 1977. The first time, in 1931, less than 20 percent of those who voted in the previous election even bothered to check the question on their ballots and they voted against the proposal, 97,788 to 28,204. The issue was raised again in 1947, and this time almost 50 percent of the voters faced the question, only to vote it down, 191,876 to 144, 692.

In December 1959, a special session of the General Assembly proposed a constitutional convention that would be limited to 12 areas of consideration. These 12 areas were as follows:

1. The organization and powers of municipal, county, and other local governments
2. The judicial department and courts
3. Compensation of public officers and employees
4. The order of succession of persons entitled to act as governor and the circumstances under which the governor is disqualified to act
5. Misfeasance, malfeasance, and nonfeasance of public officers
6. Official oaths
7. The Railroad Commission
8. The legislative department
9. The mode of revision or amendment of the Constitution
10. Incompatibility of offices
11. Terms and tenure of state officers other than governor and lieutenant governor
12. Removal of limitations on the holding of real estate

Limited revision was subsequently upheld by the Supreme Court. Passage of a bill in special session permitted action by the 1960 General Assembly that was due to begin its regular session early in January, thereby speeding up the process of calling the convention. Both sessions enacted the appropriate measure, and a Constitution Revision Committee was formed to review and report on proposed changes. The convention call was endorsed by most of the state's leading political, commercial, and educational organizations, and seemed to face no major organized opposition. The voters, however, rejected the convention call question at the November 1960 general election. The result was 324,777 in favor to 342,501 opposed. In the 1960 election almost 60 percent of those voting in the election voted on the constitutional question.

After both the 1974 and 1976 sessions of the General Assembly had approved bills calling for a referendum on a constitutional convention, the issue came before the voters once again in 1977.

In this instance the response by the electorate again was negative, 165,311 in favor, and 254,934 opposed.

Judicial Interpretation

Only a limited number of major changes have been made in the 1891 Constitution via the process of amendment. Efforts to call a convention have failed dismally. However, the Supreme Court's interpretations of constitutional provisions have sometimes accommodated the needs of changing times with notable flexibility. As times have changed, the courts have been called upon to apply provisions of the Constitution to circumstances that were never anticipated by the framers. For example, a law permitting first and second class cities to levy an occupational license tax on all persons working within the city limits was upheld by the Supreme Court in 1948. Such a tax had not been thought of at the time the Constitution was written.

Other examples of judicial interpretation have involved fiscal matters. The Commonwealth of Kentucky is an enormous enterprise, whose business transactions for 2011, as measured by the Gross Domestic Product, involved over $165 billion. At times, under the stress of emergency, it has been essential that money be borrowed, literally to keep the government in existence. In circumstances such as these, the Supreme Court at times has been quite liberal in its interpretation of the provisions of the Constitution. But it cannot be said that the court has overthrown the document or rewritten callously its meaning merely to fit the needs of the moment. As previously mentioned, the Supreme Court and the General Assembly have related the compensation of public officials to the value of the dollar. As the value of the dollar shrinks, the practical constitutional maximum automatically is raised. The effect of this is that in 2012 local officials have a $68,169.48, rather than a $7,200 maximum, and the $12,000 limitation is now $113,615.80. Another example of the court's broadening the meaning of the Constitution is in the upholding of revenue bonds on the basis that these do not constitute a full faith and credit indebtedness falling within the precise debt limitations of the current Constitution.

Constitution Review Commission

A Constitution Review Commission, created in 1949, came to the conclusion that the Constitution might be brought up to date and kept up to date by a judicious process of amendment. With this in mind, the commission recommended to the General Assembly a plan for liberalizing the amending process, which was rejected by the voters in 1951. The measure would have made it possible to submit more than two amendments for ratification at one time. In addition, however, the voters could be asked to approve more than one amendment by only a single vote, and this provision met strenuous objection. Finally, in 1979, the voters did approve an amendment increasing from two to four the number of amendments that may be considered at one election. However, since that time, the maximum number of amendments has been proposed only once, in 1990.

Constitution Revision Assembly Direct Proposal

In a continuing effort to bring about constitutional revision in Kentucky, the 1964 General Assembly passed legislation providing for a Constitution Revision Assembly, a statewide panel of Kentuckians of both political parties, representing all areas of the state and groups of Kentuckians.

House Bill 39, signed into law on February 7, 1964, charged the Constitution Revision Assembly (CRA) as an agency of the Legislative Research Commission “to carry on a program of study, review, examination and exposition of the Constitution of Kentucky.” The CRA would “analyze and appraise such suggestions for amendment or revision as may be made by any person or persons, groups or organizations pertaining to or in opposition thereto; and...bring to the public attention such proposals for revision or amendment of the Constitution in accordance therewith.” The CRA was further directed to submit its findings and conclusions to the General Assembly.

To implement House Bill 39, a committee composed of the Governor, the Lieutenant Governor, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and the Chief Justice of the Court of Appeals met to select membership of the CRA. Thirty-eight delegates were selected on the basis of the 38 senatorial districts; 5 delegates were selected from the state-at-large; and in accordance with the legislation, all living ex-Governors of the Commonwealth became members of the CRA.

This 50-member body convened for the first time in the House Chamber of the Old Capitol in Frankfort on February 17, 1964. It was in that chamber the current Constitution was debated, drafted, and approved by convention more than 100 years ago.

At that first meeting, five officers were elected. Five standing committees were established to deal with these broad subjects: State Government; Local Government; Bill of Rights and Elections; Education, Health and Welfare; and Revision Process. A sixth committee, the Coordinating Committee, was named and charged with coordinating the work of the other committees. As a rule, each delegate was placed on two committees in accordance with individual preference.

The first 18 months were largely taken up with the work on subcommittee and committee level. By November 17, 1965, however, the committee work was virtually complete and the CRA met to debate committee proposals in preparation for submission of a final draft to the 1966 General Assembly.

The CRA proceeded to a section-by-section consideration of the Constitution, reserving final action until a completed document was developed. The completed draft was approved by the CRA on December 28, 1965. On January 3, 1966, the delegates reconvened in the Old Capitol to affix their signatures to the proposed Constitution.

The fundamental approach of the CRA was to revise the present Constitution rather than write a new one. Sections considered obsolete or statutory were deleted from the proposed document. Those sections considered in need of some change were amended. The remainder were retained unchanged. As a result the proposed document contained approximately 13,000 words organized into 157 sections as compared with the amended 1891 Constitution of 21,500 words and 266 sections. Still, about 70 percent of the final draft was taken unchanged from the 1891 Constitution.

Generally, the proposed changes were as follows:

1. Bill of Rights

While the original 26 sections of the Bill of Rights were retained unchanged, three new sections were added: permitting waiver of pre-trial indictment; prohibiting unreasonable detention of material witnesses; and protecting citizens against wiretapping and mechanical or electrical eavesdropping.

2. Legislative Department

The proposed legislative article reflected the feeling of most delegates that the General Assembly is over-restricted by the 1891 Constitution and unable to perform its proper role as a coordinate branch of government.

The major proposals for the legislative department were a) designation of the General Assembly as a “continuing body,” capable of working through committees even when not in session; b) provision for annual, rather than biennial, sessions with an optional 3-month extension if approved by two-thirds vote; and (c) lengthening terms of Senators from 4 to 6 years, and terms of Representatives from 2 to 4 years.

Another significant proposal was removing the $500,000 casual debt limit in the 1891 Constitution and setting the limit at 2 percent of the preceding year’s revenue.

3. Executive Department

Major proposals for the executive department of government were 1) reducing the number of elected Constitutional State Officers to four: governor, lieutenant governor, attorney general, and auditor of public accounts and allowing these officers to succeed themselves in office once; 2) allowing the governor to limit the length of special legislative sessions as well as the subjects to be considered; 3) deleting the requirement that the governor be dispossessed of office when absent from the state; and 4) extending from 10 to 20 days the period following a legislative session during which the governor could veto bills, but allowing the General Assembly to pass upon his veto at its next session.

4. Judicial Department

The Judicial Article of the draft called for a unified court system with general control resting in the “Supreme” Court, which was the Court of Appeals under the 1891 Constitution. Other major proposals called for creating an intermediate “Court of Appeals” of nine judges; retaining the present circuit court system; and consolidating functions of the remaining inferior courts into a district court in each county.

Changes were also proposed in the method of selection of judges and their terms of office. Judges of the two higher courts would be appointed for 8 years, while judges of the lowest court—district court—would be elected for 4 years. Judges of the circuit courts would be elected or appointed for 6 years depending on the population of the districts, but in either case the voters could exercise their option to change the method of selection.

Each judge in the Commonwealth would be required to be a licensed attorney.

(Subsequently, most of these proposals were made a part of the Constitution by way of the Judicial Article Amendment of 1975.)

5. Local Government

Aiming toward more home rule at the local level, the CRA draft granted units of local government the power to create any form of government and exercise any powers not prohibited by their charters, general law, or the Constitution. This is the opposite approach from that embodied in the 1891 Constitution that limits the powers of local government to those specifically set forth by the General Assembly or the Constitution. The proposal also removed most local officers from the Constitution, allowing more legislative discretion.

The CRA draft also limited the power of the General Assembly to abolish or consolidate units of local government without approval of the voters in the affected areas.

6. Education

The major objective of the proposed article on education was to remove the chief state school officer from politics and provide more continuity in the office. To accomplish this, and retain voter control over education, the new draft called for an elected, rather than appointed, State Board of Education, charged with the responsibility of appointing the superintendent of public instruction.

7. Revision Process

The two methods of revision, amendment and convention, set forth in the 1891 Constitution were continued in the proposed Constitution, but with substantial changes.

The new proposal would allow a special session, rather than just a regular session, of the General Assembly to propose amendments, provided such amendments were included in the original call of the session; and the number of amendments that could be submitted to the voters at one time was increased from two to five.

The procedure for calling a convention was completely rewritten. Instead of requiring the approval by two General Assembly sessions, plus the voters at the polls, before a convention could be called, the CRA draft stated that a convention could be called by a three-fifths vote of the General Assembly in regular session. In addition the proposal required that any document drawn up by the convention be submitted to the voters for approval or rejection. The 1891 Constitution does not require voter approval of the final document.

The Constitution Revision Assembly convened again on February 22, 1966, at the request of the General Assembly to adjust the election scheduled on a biennial rather than annual basis. The General Assembly then provided for a rather unique method for submitting the draft Constitution to the voters.

Senate Bill 161, 1966 Regular Session, provided for direct submission of the proposed Constitution to the voters under Section 4 of the Bill of Rights, which states that all power is inherent in the people and they have at all times an inalienable and indefeasible right to alter, reform or abolish their government in such manner as they may deem proper.

This method of submission was subsequently approved by the Court of Appeals, and the draft Constitution was placed on the ballot for the general election on November 8, 1967.

Once again the Kentucky voters displayed their reluctance to change their Constitution, and the document was defeated by an overwhelming vote of 517,034 to 143,133. It did not carry a single county.

After a review of past failures at general revision, the best approach well may be to present broad constitutional amendments to be enacted and approved in the precise manner set forth in the 1891 Constitution. The 1979 amendment of Section 256 makes such a procedure all the more feasible.

Many Kentuckians are never aware they live under a Constitution. They never see it. They never feel it directly. The Constitution may exist as a vague conception of State government in the abstract, but it seems remote to every day life on rural mail routes and pleasant streets in little towns....Yet without this set of fundamental principles to guide our local and State governments, the whole structure would fall down in confusion....

Constitution of Kentucky

PREAMBLE

We, the people of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, grateful to Almighty God for the civil, political and religious liberties we enjoy, and invoking the continuance of these blessings, do ordain and establish this Constitution.

BILL OF RIGHTS

That the great and essential principles of liberty and free government may be recognized and established, we declare that:

Text as ratified on: August 3, 1891, and revised September 28, 1891.

History: Not yet amended.

Section 1. Rights of life, liberty, worship, pursuit of safety and happiness, free speech, acquiring and protecting property, peaceable assembly, redress of grievances, bearing arms. All men are, by nature, free and equal, and have certain inherent and inalienable rights, among which may be reckoned:

First: The right of enjoying and defending their lives and liberties.

Second: The right of worshipping Almighty God according to the dictates of their consciences.

Third: The right of seeking and pursuing their safety and happiness.

Fourth: The right of freely communicating their thoughts and opinions.

Fifth: The right of acquiring and protecting property.

Sixth: The right of assembling together in a peaceable manner for their common good, and of applying to those invested with the power of government for redress of grievances or other proper purposes, by petition, address or remonstrance.

Seventh: The right to bear arms in defense of themselves and of the State, subject to the power of the General Assembly to enact laws to prevent persons from carrying concealed weapons.

Text as ratified on: August 3, 1891, and revised September 28, 1891.

History: Not yet amended.

Free speech, right of, Const. 8; Religious freedom, right of, Const. 5.

Section 2. Absolute and arbitrary power denied.

Absolute and arbitrary power over the lives, liberty and property of freemen exists nowhere in a republic, not even in the largest majority.

History: Not yet amended.
Elections, Const. 145 to 155.

Section 7. Right of trial by jury. The ancient mode of trial by jury shall be held sacred, and the right thereof remain inviolate, subject to such modifications as may be authorized by this Constitution.

Text as ratified on: August 3, 1891, and revised September 28, 1891.

History: Not yet amended.
Juries, Const. 248

Section 8. Freedom of speech and of the press. Printing presses shall be free to every person who undertakes to examine the proceedings of the General Assembly or any branch of government, and no law shall ever be made to restrain the right thereof. Every person may freely and fully speak, write and print on any subject, being responsible for the abuse of that liberty.

Text as ratified on: August 3, 1891, and revised September 28, 1891.

History: Not yet amended.
Free speech, Const. 1.

Section 9. Truth may be given in evidence in prosecution for publishing matters proper for public information – Jury to try law and facts in libel prosecutions. In prosecutions for the publication of papers investigating the official conduct of officers or men in a public capacity, or where the matter published is proper for public information, the truth thereof may be given in evidence; and in all indictments for libel the jury shall have the right to determine the law and the facts, under the direction of the court, as in other cases.

Text as ratified on: August 3, 1891, and revised September 28, 1891.

History: Not yet amended.

Section 10. Security from search and seizure – Conditions of issuance of warrant. The people shall be secure in their persons, houses, papers and possessions, from unreasonable search and seizure; and no warrant shall issue to search any place, or seize any person or thing, without describing them as nearly as may be, nor without probable cause supported by oath or affirmation.

Power of pardon for treason vested in General Assembly, Const. 77.

Section 30. Term of office of Senators and Representatives. Members of the House of Representatives and Senators shall be elected at the general election in even-numbered years for terms of four years for Senators and two years for members of the House of Representatives. The term of office of Representatives and Senators shall begin upon the first day of January of the year succeeding their election.

Text as ratified on: November 6, 1979.

History: 1979 amendment was proposed by 1978 Ky. Acts ch. 440, sec. 1; original version ratified August 3, 1891, and revised September 28, 1891.

Section 31. Time of election and term of office of Senators and Representatives. At the general election to be held in November, 1984, and every two years thereafter, there shall be elected for four years one Senator in each Senatorial District in which the term of his predecessor in office will then expire and in every Representative District one Representative for two years.

Text as ratified on: November 6, 1979.

History: 1979 amendment was proposed by 1978 Ky. Acts ch. 440, sec. 1; original version ratified August 3, 1891, and revised September 28, 1891.

Vacancies, Const. 152.

Section 32. Qualifications of Senators and Representatives. No person shall be a Representative who, at the time of his election, is not a citizen of Kentucky, has not attained the age of twenty-four years, and who has not resided in this State two years next preceding his election, and the last year thereof in the county, town or city for which he may be chosen. No person shall be a Senator who, at the time of his election, is not a citizen of Kentucky, has not attained the age of thirty years, and has not resided in this State six years next preceding his election, and the last year thereof in the district for which he may be chosen.

Disqualification for dueling, using money or property to secure or influence election, receiving profit or public funds, or accepting free passes, Const. 150, 173, 197, 239; Special laws to legalize unauthorized acts prohibited, Const. 59.

Section 33. Senatorial and Representative districts. The first General Assembly after the adoption of this Constitution shall divide the State into thirty-eight Senatorial Districts, and one hundred Representative Districts, as nearly equal in population as may be without dividing any county, except where a county may include more than one district, which districts shall constitute the Senatorial and Representative Districts for ten years. Not more than two counties shall be joined together to form a Representative District: Provided, In doing so the principle requiring every district to be as nearly equal in population as may be shall not be violated. At the expiration of that time, the General Assembly shall then, and every ten years thereafter, redistrict the State according to this rule, and for the purposes expressed in this section. If, in making said districts, inequality of population should be unavoidable, any advantage resulting therefrom shall be given to districts having the largest territory. No part of a county shall be added to another county to make a district, and the counties forming a district shall be contiguous.

Section 36. Time and place of meetings of General Assembly. (1) The General Assembly, in odd-numbered years, shall meet in regular session for a period not to exceed a total of thirty (30) legislative days divided as follows: The General Assembly shall convene for the first part of the session on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in January in odd-numbered years for the purposes of electing legislative leaders, adopting rules of procedure, organizing committees, and introducing and considering legislation. The General Assembly shall then adjourn. The General Assembly shall convene for the second part of the session on the first Tuesday in February of that year. Any legislation introduced but not enacted in the first part of the session shall be carried over into the second part of the session. In any part of the session in an odd-numbered year, no bill raising revenue or appropriating funds shall become a law unless it shall be agreed to by three-fifths of all the members elected to each House.

(2) The General Assembly shall then adjourn until the first Tuesday after the first Monday in January of the following even-numbered years, at which time the General Assembly shall convene in regular session.

(3) All sessions shall be held at the seat of government, except in case of war, insurrection or pestilence, when it may, by proclamation of the Governor, assemble, for the time being, elsewhere.

Section 84. When Lieutenant Governor to act as Governor – President of the Senate not to preside at impeachment of Governor – Certification of disability of Governor. Should the Governor be impeached and removed from office, die, refuse to qualify, resign, certify by entry on his Journal that he is unable to discharge the duties of his office, or be, from any cause, unable to discharge the duties of his office, the Lieutenant Governor shall exercise all the power and authority appertaining to the office of Governor until another be duly elected and qualified, or the Governor shall be able to discharge the duties of his office. On the trial of the Governor, the President of the Senate shall not preside over the proceedings, but the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court shall preside during the trial.

If the Governor, due to physical or mental incapacitation, is unable to discharge the duties of his office, the Attorney General may petition the Supreme Court to have the Governor declared disabled. If the Supreme Court determines in a unanimous decision that the Governor is unable to discharge the duties of his office, the Chief Justice shall certify such disability to the Secretary of State who shall enter same on the Journal of the Acts of the Governor, and the Lieutenant Governor shall assume the duties of the Governor, and shall act as Governor until the Supreme Court determines that the disability of the Governor has ceased to exist. Before the Governor resumes his duties, the finding of the Court that the disability has ceased shall be certified by the Chief Justice to the Secretary of State who shall enter such finding on the Journal of the Acts of the Governor.

THE JUDICIAL DEPARTMENT

Section 109. The judicial power – Unified system – Impeachment. The judicial power of the Commonwealth shall be vested exclusively in one Court of Justice which shall be divided into a Supreme Court, a Court of Appeals, a trial court of general jurisdiction known as the Circuit Court and a trial court of limited jurisdiction known as the District Court. The court shall constitute a unified judicial system for operation and administration. The impeachment powers of the General Assembly shall remain inviolate.

History: Repeal and reenactment proposed by 1974 Ky. Acts ch. 84, sec. 1; original version ratified August 3, 1891, and revised September 28, 1891.

Local and special laws prohibited, Const. 59.

The Supreme Court

Section 110. Composition – Jurisdiction – Quorum – Special justices – Districts – Chief Justice. (1) The Supreme Court shall consist of the Chief Justice of the Commonwealth and six associate Justices.

(2)(a) The Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction only, except it shall have the power to issue all writs necessary in aid of its appellate jurisdiction, or the complete determination of any cause, or as may be required to exercise control of the Court of Justice.

(b) Appeals from a judgment of the Circuit Court imposing a sentence of death or life imprisonment or imprisonment for twenty years or more shall be taken directly to the Supreme Court. In all other cases, criminal and civil, the Supreme Court shall exercise appellate jurisdiction as provided by its rules.

(3) A majority of the Justices of the Supreme Court shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business. If as many as two Justices decline or are unable to sit in the trial of any cause, the Chief Justice shall certify that fact to the Governor, who shall appoint to try the particular cause a sufficient number of Justices to constitute a full court for the trial of the cause.

(4) The Court of Appeals districts existing on the effective date of this amendment to the Constitution shall constitute the initial Supreme Court districts. The General Assembly thereafter may redistrict the Commonwealth, by counties, into seven Supreme Court districts as nearly equal in population and as compact in form as possible. There shall be one Justice from each Supreme Court district.

(5)(a) The Justices of the Supreme Court shall elect one of their number to serve as Chief Justice for a term of four years.

(b) The Chief Justice of the Commonwealth shall be the executive head of the Court of Justice and he shall appoint such administrative assistants as he deems necessary. He shall assign temporarily any justice or judge of the Commonwealth, active or retired, to sit in any court other than the Supreme Court when he deems such assignment necessary for the prompt disposition of causes. The Chief Justice shall submit the budget for the Court of Justice and perform all other necessary administrative functions relating to the court.

The Court of Appeals

Section 111. Composition – Jurisdiction – Administration – Panels. (1) The Court of Appeals shall consist initially of fourteen judges, an equal number to be selected from each Supreme Court district. The number of judges thereafter shall be determined from time to time by the General Assembly upon certification of necessity by the Supreme Court.

(2) The Court of Appeals shall have appellate jurisdiction only, except that it may be authorized by rules of the Supreme Court to review directly decisions of administrative agencies of the Commonwealth, and it may issue all writs necessary in aid of its appellate jurisdiction, or the complete determination of any cause within its appellate jurisdiction. In all other cases, it shall exercise appellate jurisdiction as provided by law.

(3) The judges of the Court of Appeals shall elect one of their number to serve as Chief Judge for a term of four years. The Chief Judge shall exercise such authority and perform such duties in the administration of the Court of Appeals as are prescribed in this section or as may be prescribed by the Supreme Court.

(4) The Court of Appeals shall divide itself into panels of not less than three judges. A panel may decide a cause by the concurring vote of a majority of its judges. The Chief Judge shall make assignments of judges to panels. The Court of Appeals shall prescribe the times and places in the Commonwealth at which each panel shall sit.

The Circuit Court

Section 112. Location – Circuits – Composition – Administration – Jurisdiction. (1) Circuit Court shall be held in each county.

(2) The Circuit Court districts existing on the effective date of this amendment to the Constitution shall continue under the name Judicial Circuits, the General Assembly having power upon certification of the necessity therefor by the Supreme Court to reduce, increase or rearrange the judicial districts. A judicial circuit composed of more than one county shall be as compact in form as possible and of contiguous counties. No county shall be divided in creating a judicial circuit.

(3) The number of circuit judges in each district existing on the effective date of this amendment shall continue, the General Assembly having power upon certification of the necessity therefor by the Supreme Court, to change the number of circuit judges in any judicial circuit.

(4) In a judicial circuit having only one judge, he shall be the chief judge. In judicial circuits having two or more judges, they shall select biennially a chief judge, and if they fail to do so within a reasonable time, the Supreme Court shall designate the chief judge. The chief judge shall exercise such authority and perform such duties in the administration of his judicial circuit as may be prescribed by the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court may provide by rules for administration of judicial circuits by regions designated by it.

(5) The Circuit Court shall have original jurisdiction of all justiciable causes not vested in some other court. It shall have such appellate jurisdiction as may be provided by law.

(6) The Supreme Court may designate one or more divisions of Circuit Court within a judicial circuit as a family court division. A Circuit Court division so designated shall retain the general jurisdiction of the Circuit Court and shall have additional jurisdiction as may be provided by the General Assembly.

SCHEDULE

As a part of this amendment and as a schedule of transitional provisions, for the purpose of this amendment:

District judges elected for the term beginning on the first Monday in January of 2003, who possess the qualifications of a Circuit Judge and who are assigned by the Chief Justice to serve as family court judges on or before the commencement of the term, shall on that date become Circuit Judges with terms of office coinciding with the terms of Circuit Judges generally, and another numbered division or divisions of that judicial circuit shall be created. When a District Judge becomes a Circuit Judge pursuant to this provision, that District Judgeship shall be abolished and there shall be no vacancy to fill. The General Assembly, upon the ratification of this amendment, shall enact legislation to implement the provisions of this amendment in a manner consistent with the Supreme Court's adjustment of any Circuit Court division as a family court division.

The District Court

Section 113. Location – Districts – Composition – Administration – Trial commissioners – Jurisdiction. (1) District Court shall be held in each county.

(2) The Circuit Court districts existing on the effective date of this amendment shall continue for District Court purposes under the name "Judicial Districts," the General Assembly having power upon certification of the necessity therefor by the Supreme Court to reduce, increase or rearrange the districts. A judicial district composed of more than one county shall be as compact in form as possible and of contiguous counties. No county shall be divided in creating a judicial district.

(3) Each judicial district created by this amendment initially shall have at least one district judge who shall serve as chief judge and there shall be such other district judges as the General Assembly shall determine. The number of district judges in each judicial district thereafter shall be determined by the General Assembly upon certification of necessity therefor by the Supreme Court.

(4) In a judicial district having only one judge he shall be the chief judge. In those districts having two or more judges they shall select biennially a chief judge and if they fail to do so within a reasonable time, the Supreme Court shall designate the chief judge. The chief judge shall exercise such authority and perform such duties in the administration of his district as may be prescribed by the Supreme Court.

(5) In any county in which no district judge resides the chief judge of the district shall appoint a trial commissioner who shall be a resident of such county and who shall be an attorney if one is qualified and available. Other trial commissioners with like qualifications may be appointed by the chief judge in any judicial district upon certification of the necessity therefor by the Supreme Court. All trial commissioners shall have power to perform such duties of the district court as may be prescribed by the Supreme Court.

(6) The district court shall be a court of limited jurisdiction and shall exercise original jurisdiction as may be provided by the General Assembly.

Section 118. Vacancies. (1) A vacancy in the office of a justice of the Supreme Court, or of a judge of the Court of Appeals, Circuit or District Court which under Section 152 of this Constitution is to be filled by appointment by the Governor shall be filled by the Governor from a list of three names presented to him by the appropriate judicial nominating commission. If the Governor fails to make an appointment from the list within sixty days from the date it is presented to him, the appointment shall be made from the same list by the chief justice of the Supreme Court.

(2) There shall be one Judicial Nominating Commission for the Supreme Court and the Court of Appeals, one for each judicial circuit, and one for each judicial district, except that a circuit and district having the same boundary shall have but one judicial nominating commission. Each commission shall consist of seven members, one of whom shall be the chief justice of the Supreme Court, who shall be chairman. Two members of each commission shall be members of the bar, who shall be elected by their fellow members. The other four members shall be appointed by the Governor from among persons not members of the bar, and these four shall include at least two members of each of the two political parties of the Commonwealth having the largest number of voters. Members of a judicial circuit or judicial district nominating commission must be residents of the circuit or district, respectively, and the lawyer members of the commission shall be elected by the members of the bar residing in the circuit or district, respectively. The terms of office of members of judicial nominating commissions shall be fixed by the General Assembly. No person shall be elected or appointed a member of a judicial nominating commission who holds any other public office or any office in a political party or organization.

SCHEDULE

As a part of this amendment and as a schedule of transitional provisions, for the purposes of this amendment:

1. The Judges of the Court of Appeals in office on the effective date of this amendment shall become Justices of the Supreme Court, for the duration of their terms, and the election of successors shall be in accordance with those terms.

2. The Circuit Judges in office on the effective date of this amendment shall be continued therein for the duration of their terms. The term of office of eight years provided in this amendment for Circuit Judges shall apply to the Circuit Judges elected at the election at which this amendment is adopted.

3. The term of office of Judges of the Court of Appeals created by this amendment shall be deemed to commence as of the first Monday, in January, 1976. The vacancies existing on that date by virtue of no election having been held for the office in November, 1975 shall be filled in accordance with Section 152 of the present Constitution and Section 118 as created by this amendment.

4. The term of office of Judges of the District Court shall be deemed to commence as of the First Monday in January, 1978, and judges shall be elected at the regular election next preceding that date. The District Court shall be constituted and organized as of the first Monday in January, 1978.

5. The quarterly courts, county courts as judicial bodies, justices courts and police courts in existence on the effective date of this amendment shall continue in existence until the first Monday in January, 1978. For that period those courts shall continue to be governed by the present Constitution and none of the provisions of this amendment shall apply to them, except that those courts shall be deemed a part of the unified judicial system and shall be subject to the general control and rulemaking power of the Supreme Court. The terms of any police court judges which commence on the first Monday in January, 1976, shall be reduced to two years from that date.

6. The Clerk of the Court of Appeals elected at the election at which this amendment is adopted shall serve as Clerk of the Supreme Court for the term for which he was elected, subject to removal by the Supreme Court for good cause.

7. Until otherwise provided by law the statutes applicable to the present Court of Appeals and not inconsistent with this amendment shall apply to the Supreme Court.

8. All causes and proceedings pending in the present Court of Appeals on the effective date of this amendment are transferred to and shall be decided or otherwise disposed of by the Supreme Court.

9. All causes and proceedings pending in the quarterly courts, county courts as judicial bodies, justices courts and police courts, on the first Monday in January, 1978, shall then be transferred to and decided by the Circuit Court or the District Court of the area, in accordance with the respective jurisdictions prescribed for the latter courts.

Section 147. Registration of voters Manner of voting – Absent voting – Voting machines – Election defined – Election laws – Illiterate and disabled voters. The General Assembly shall provide by law for the registration of all persons entitled to vote in cities and towns having a population of five thousand or more; and may provide by general law for the registration of other voters in the state. Where registration is required, only persons registered shall have the right to vote. The mode of registration shall be prescribed by the General Assembly. In all elections by persons in a representative capacity, the voting shall be viva voce and made a matter of record; but all elections by the people shall be by secret official ballot, furnished by public authority to the voters at the polls, and marked by each voter in private at the polls, and then and there deposited, or any person absent from the county of his legal residence, or from the state, may be permitted to vote in a manner provided by law. Counties so desiring may use voting machines, these machines to be installed at the expense of such counties. The word elections in this section includes the decision of questions submitted to the voters, as well as the choice of officers by them. The General Assembly shall pass all necessary laws to enforce this section, and shall provide that persons illiterate, blind, or in any way disabled may have their ballots marked or voted as herein required.

Credit of Commonwealth not to be loaned, Const. 177.

Section 157b. Adoption of budget required for cities, counties, and taxing districts – Expenditures not to exceed revenues for fiscal year. Prior to each fiscal year, the legislative body of each city, county, and taxing district shall adopt a budget showing total expected revenues and expenditures for the fiscal year. No city, county, or taxing district shall expend any funds in any fiscal year in excess of the revenues for that fiscal year. A city, county, or taxing district may amend its budget for a fiscal year, but the revised expenditures may not exceed the revised revenues. As used in this section, “revenues” shall mean all income from every source, including unencumbered reserves carried over from the previous fiscal year, and “expenditures” shall mean all funds to be paid out for expenses of the city, county, or taxing district due during the fiscal year, including amounts necessary to pay the principal and interest due during the fiscal year on any debt.

History: Creation proposed by 1994 Ky. Acts ch. 168, sec. 3.

Section 158. Maximum indebtedness of cities, counties, and taxing districts – General Assembly authorized to set additional limits and conditions. Cities, towns, counties, and taxing districts shall not incur indebtedness to an amount exceeding the following maximum percentages on the value of the taxable property therein, to be estimated by the last assessment previous to the incurring of the indebtedness: Cities having a population of fifteen thousand or more, ten percent (10%); cities having a population of less than fifteen thousand but not less than three thousand, five percent (5%); cities having a population of less than three thousand, three percent (3%); and counties and taxing districts, two percent (2%), unless in case of emergency, the public health or safety should so require. Nothing shall prevent the issue of renewal bonds, or bonds to fund the floating indebtedness of any city, county, or taxing district. Subject to the limits and conditions set forth in this section and elsewhere in this Constitution, the General Assembly shall have the power to establish additional limits on indebtedness and conditions under which debt may be incurred by cities, counties, and taxing districts.

Section 160. Municipal officers – Election and term of office – Officers ineligible – Fiscal officers. The Mayor or Chief Executive, Police Judges, members of legislative boards or councils of towns and cities shall be elected by the qualified voters thereof: Provided, The Mayor or Chief Executive and Police Judges of the towns of the fourth, fifth and sixth classes may be appointed or elected as provided by law. The terms of office of Mayors or Chief Executives and Police Judges shall be four years, and until their successors shall be qualified, and of members of legislative boards, two years. When any city of the first or second class is divided into wards or districts, members of legislative boards shall be elected at large by the qualified voters of said city, but so selected that an equal proportion thereof shall reside in each of the said wards or districts; but when in any city of the first, second or third class, there are two legislative boards, the less numerous shall be selected from and elected by the voters at large of said city; but other officers of towns or cities shall be elected by the qualified voters therein, or appointed by the local authorities thereof, as the General Assembly may, by a general law, provide; but when elected by the voters of a town or city, their terms of office shall be four years, and until their successors shall be qualified. No Mayor or Chief Executive of any city of the first or second class, after the expiration of three successive terms of office to which he has been elected under this Constitution shall be eligible for the succeeding term. No fiscal officer of any city of the first or second class, after the expiration of the term of office to which he has been elected under this Constitution, shall be eligible for the succeeding term. “Fiscal officer” shall not include an Auditor or Assessor, or any other officer whose chief duty is not the collection or holding of public moneys. The General Assembly shall prescribe the qualifications of all officers of towns and cities, the manner in and causes for which they may be removed from office, and how vacancies in such offices may be filled.

Section 170. Property exempt from taxation – Cities may exempt factories for five years. There shall be exempt from taxation public property used for public purposes; places of burial not held for private or corporate profit; real property owned and occupied by, and personal property both tangible and intangible owned by, institutions of religion; institutions of purely public charity, and institutions of education not used or employed for gain by any person or corporation, and the income of which is devoted solely to the cause of education, public libraries, their endowments, and the income of such property as is used exclusively for their maintenance; household goods of a person used in his home; crops grown in the year in which the assessment is made, and in the hands of the producer; and real property maintained as the permanent residence of the owner, who is sixty-five years of age or older, or is classified as totally disabled under a program authorized or administered by an agency of the United States government or by any retirement system either within or without the Commonwealth of Kentucky, provided the property owner received disability payments pursuant to such disability classification, has maintained such disability classification for the entirety of the particular taxation period, and has filed with the appropriate local assessor by December 31 of the taxation period, on forms provided therefor, a signed statement indicating continuing disability as provided herein made under penalty of perjury, up to the assessed valuation of sixty-five hundred dollars on said residence and contiguous real property, except for assessment for special benefits. The real property may be held by legal or equitable title, by the entireties, jointly, in common, as a condominium, or indirectly by the stock ownership or membership representing the owner's or member's proprietary interest in a corporation owning a fee or a leasehold initially in excess of ninety-eight years. The exemptions shall apply only to the value of the real property assessable to the owner or, in case of ownership through stock or membership in a corporation, the value of the proportion which his interest in the corporation bears to the assessed value of the property. The General Assembly may authorize any incorporated city or town to exempt manufacturing establishments from municipal taxation, for a period not exceeding five years, as an inducement to their location. Notwithstanding the provisions of Sections 3, 172, and 174 of this Constitution to the contrary, the General Assembly may provide by law an exemption for all or any portion of the property tax for any class of personal property.

Property not to be exempted by General Assembly, Const., § 3.

Section 171. State tax to be levied – Taxes to be levied and collected for public purposes only and by general laws, and to be uniform within classes – Classification of property for taxation – Bonds exempt – Referendum on act classifying property. The General Assembly shall provide by law an annual tax, which, with other resources, shall be sufficient to defray the estimated expenses of the Commonwealth for each fiscal year. Taxes shall be levied and collected for public purposes only and shall be uniform upon all property of the same class subject to taxation within the territorial limits of the authority levying the tax; and all taxes shall be levied and collected by general laws.

The General Assembly shall have power to divide property into classes and to determine what class or classes of property shall be subject to local taxation. Bonds of the state and of counties, municipalities, taxing and school districts shall not be subject to taxation.

Any law passed or enacted by the General Assembly pursuant to the provisions of or under this amendment, or amended section of the Constitution, classifying property and providing a lower rate of taxation on personal property, tangible or intangible, than upon real estate shall be subject to the referendum power of the people, which is hereby declared to exist to apply only to this section, or amended section. The referendum may be demanded by the people against one or more items, sections, or parts of any act enacted pursuant to or under the power granted by this amendment, or amended section. The referendum petition shall be filed with the Secretary of State not more than four months after the final adjournment of the Legislative Assembly which passed the bill on which the referendum is demanded. The veto power of the Governor shall not extend to measures referred to the people under this section. All elections on measures referred to the people under this act shall be at the regular general election, except when the Legislative Assembly shall order a special election. Any measure referred to the people shall take effect and become a law when approved by the majority of the votes cast thereon, and not otherwise. The whole number of votes cast for the candidates for Governor at the regular election, last preceding the filing of any petition, shall be the basis upon which the legal voters necessary to sign such petition shall be counted. The power of the referendum shall be ordered by the Legislative Assembly at any time any acts or bills are enacted, pursuant to the power granted under this section or amended section, prior to the year of one thousand nine hundred and seventeen. After that time the power of the referendum may be ordered either by the petition signed by five percent of the legal voters or by the Legislative Assembly at the time said acts or bills are enacted. The General Assembly enacting the bill shall provide a way by which the act shall be submitted to the people. The filing of a referendum petition against one or more items, sections or parts of an act, shall not delay the remainder of that act from becoming operative.

Section 172A. Assessment for ad valorem tax purposes of agricultural and horticultural land. Notwithstanding contrary provisions of Sections 171, 172, or 174 of this Constitution –

The General Assembly shall provide by general law for the assessment for ad valorem tax purposes of agricultural and horticultural land according to the land's value for agricultural or horticultural use. The General Assembly may provide that any change in land use from agricultural or horticultural to another use shall require the levy of an additional tax not to exceed the additional amount that would have been owing had the land been assessed under Section 172 of this Constitution for the current year and the two next preceding years.

The General Assembly may provide for reasonable differences in the rate of ad valorem taxation within different areas of the same taxing districts on that class of property which includes the surface of the land. Those differences shall relate directly to differences between nonrevenue-producing governmental services and benefits giving land urban character which are furnished in one or several areas in contrast to other areas of the taxing district.

MODE OF REVISION

Section 256. Amendments to Constitution – How proposed and voted upon. Amendments to this Constitution may be proposed in either House of the General Assembly at a regular session, and if such amendment or amendments shall be agreed to by three-fifths of all the members elected to each House, such proposed amendment or amendments, with the yeas and nays of the members of each House taken thereon, shall be entered in full in their respective journals. Then such proposed amendment or amendments shall be submitted to the voters of the State for their ratification or rejection at the next general election for members of the House of Representatives, the vote to be taken thereon in such manner as the General Assembly may provide, and to be certified by the officers of election to the Secretary of State in such manner as shall be provided by law, which vote shall be compared and certified by the same board authorized by law to compare the polls and give certificates of election to officers for the State at large. If it shall appear that a majority of the votes cast for and against an amendment at said election was for the amendment, then the same shall become a part of the Constitution of this Commonwealth, and shall be so proclaimed by the Governor, and published in such manner as the General Assembly may direct. Said amendments shall not be submitted at an election which occurs less than ninety days from the final passage of such proposed amendment or amendments. Not more than four amendments shall be voted upon at any one time. If two or more amendments shall be submitted at the same time, they shall be submitted in such manner that the electors shall vote for or against each of such amendments separately, but an amendment may relate to a single subject or to related subject matters and may amend or modify as many articles and as many sections of the Constitution as may be necessary and appropriate in order to accomplish the objectives of the amendment. The approval of the Governor shall not be necessary to any bill, order, resolution or vote of the General Assembly, proposing an amendment or amendments to this Constitution.

Section 258. Constitutional Convention – How proposed, voted upon, and called. When a majority of all the members elected to each House of the General Assembly shall concur, by a yea and nay vote, to be entered upon their respective journals, in enacting a law to take the sense of the people of the State as to the necessity and expediency of calling a Convention for the purpose of revising or amending this Constitution, and such amendments as may have been made to the same, such law shall be spread upon their respective journals. If the next General Assembly shall, in like manner, concur in such law, it shall provide for having a poll opened in each voting precinct in this state by the officers provided by law for holding general elections at the next ensuing regular election to be held for State officers or members of the House of Representatives, which does not occur within ninety days from the final passage of such law, at which time and places the votes of the qualified voters shall be taken for and against calling the Convention, in the same manner provided by law for taking votes in other State elections. The vote for and against said proposition shall be certified to the Secretary of State by the same officers and in the same manner as in State elections. If it shall appear that a majority voting on the proposition was for calling a Convention, and if the total number of votes cast for the calling of the Convention is equal to one-fourth of the number of qualified voters who voted at the last preceding general election in this State, the Secretary of State shall certify the same to the General Assembly at its next regular session, at which session a law shall be enacted calling a Convention to readopt, revise or amend this Constitution, and such amendments as may have been made thereto.

Text as ratified on: August 3, 1891, and revised September 28, 1891.

History: Not yet amended.

Section 259. Number and qualifications of delegates. The Convention shall consist of as many delegates as there are members of the House of Representatives; and the delegates shall have the same qualifications and be elected from the same districts as said Representatives.

History: Not yet amended.

Section 260. Election of delegates – meeting. Delegates to such Convention shall be elected at the next general State election after the passage of the act calling the Convention, which does not occur within less than ninety days; and they shall meet within ninety days after their election at the Capital of the State, and continue in session until their work is completed.

Text as ratified on: August 3, 1891, and revised September 28, 1891.

History: Not yet amended.

Section 261. Certification of election and compensation of delegates. The General Assembly, in the act calling the Convention, shall provide for comparing the polls and giving certificates of election to the delegates elected, and provide for their compensation.

Text as ratified on: August 3, 1891, and revised September 28, 1891.

History: Not yet amended.

Section 262. Determination of election and qualifications of delegates – Contests. The Convention, when assembled, shall be the judge of the election and qualification of its members, and shall determine contested elections. But the General Assembly shall, in the act calling the Convention, provide for taking testimony in such cases, and for issuing a writ of election in case of a tie.

Text as ratified on: August 3, 1891, and revised September 28, 1891.

History: Not yet amended.

Section 263. Notice of election on question of calling convention. Before a vote is taken upon the question of calling a Convention, the Secretary of State shall cause notice of the election to be published in such manner as may be provided by the act directing said vote to be taken.

Text as ratified on: August 3, 1891, and revised September 28, 1891.

SCHEDULE

That no inconvenience may arise from the alterations and amendments made in this Constitution, and in order to carry the same into complete operation, it is hereby declared and ordained:

First: That all laws of this Commonwealth in force at the time of the adoption of this Constitution, not inconsistent therewith, shall remain in full force until altered or repealed by the General Assembly; and all rights, actions, prosecutions, claims and contracts of the State, counties, individuals or bodies corporate, not inconsistent therewith, shall continue as valid as if this Constitution had not been adopted. The provisions of all laws which are inconsistent with this Constitution shall cease upon its adoption, except that all laws which are inconsistent with such provisions as require legislation to enforce them shall remain in force until such legislation is had, but not longer than six years after the adoption of this Constitution, unless sooner amended or repealed by the General Assembly.

Second: That all recognizances, obligations and all other instruments entered into or executed before the adoption of this Constitution, to the State, or to any city, town, county or subdivision thereof, and all fines, taxes, penalties and forfeitures due or owing to this State, or to any city, town, county or subdivision thereof; and all writs, prosecutions, actions and causes of action, except as otherwise herein provided, shall continue and remain unaffected by the adoption of this Constitution. And all indictments which shall have been found, or may hereafter be found, for any crime or offense committed before this Constitution takes effect, may be prosecuted as if no change had taken place, except as otherwise provided in this Constitution.

Third: All Circuit, Chancery, Criminal, Law and Equity, Law, and Common Pleas Courts, as now constituted and organized by law, shall continue with their respective jurisdictions until the Judges of the Circuit Courts provided for in this Constitution shall have been elected and qualified, and shall then cease and determine; and the causes, actions and proceedings then pending in said first named courts, which are discontinued by this Constitution, shall be transferred to, and tried by, the Circuit Courts in the counties, respectively, in which said causes, actions and proceedings are pending.

Fourth: The Treasurer, Attorney-General, Auditor of Public Accounts, Superintendent of Public Instruction, and Register of the Land Office, elected in eighteen hundred and ninety-one, shall hold their offices until the first Monday in January, eighteen hundred and ninety-six, and until the election and qualification of their successors. The Governor and Lieutenant Governor elected in eighteen hundred and ninety-one shall hold their offices until the sixth Tuesday after the first Monday in November, eighteen hundred and ninety-five, and until their successors are elected and qualified. The Governor and Treasurer elected in eighteen hundred and ninety-one shall be ineligible to the succeeding term. The Governor elected in eighteen hundred and ninety-one may appoint a Secretary of State and a Commissioner of Agriculture, Labor and Statistics, as now provided, who shall hold their offices until their successors are elected and qualified, unless sooner removed by the Governor. The official bond of the present Treasurer shall be renewed at the expiration of two years from the time of his qualification.

Fifth: All officers who may be in office at the adoption of this Constitution, or who may be elected before the election of their successors, as provided in this Constitution, shall hold their respective offices until their successors are elected or appointed and qualified as provided in this Constitution.

Sixth: The Quarterly Courts created by this Constitution shall be the successors of the present statutory Quarterly Courts in the several counties of this State; and all suits, proceedings, prosecutions, records and judgments now pending or being in said last named courts shall, after the adoption of this Constitution, be transferred to the Quarterly Courts created by this Constitution, and shall proceed as though the same had been therein instituted.

ORDINANCE

We, the representatives of the people of Kentucky, in Convention assembled, in their name and by their authority and in virtue of the power vested in us as Delegates from the counties and districts respectively affixed to our names, do ordain and proclaim the foregoing to be the Constitution of the Commonwealth of Kentucky from and after this date.

Done at Frankfort this twenty-eighth day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and ninety-one, and in the one hundredth year of the Commonwealth.

| 1998 | 36, 42 | Would have required the General Assembly to meet annually in odd-numbered years for 25 days, would have reduced the organizational session by 5 days. |

* Through error was not publicized as required by Section 256 of the Constitution and although placed on the ballot, voted upon and passed, was declared invalid. See McCreary v. Speer, 156 Ky. 783, 162 S.W. 99 (1914).

 Through error was not publicized as required by Section 256 of the Constitution and thus could not be placed on the ballot. See Arnett v. Sullivan, 279 Ky. 720, 132 S.W.2d 76 (1939).

 Although ratified by the voters, this amendment was declared invalid by the Kentucky Court of Appeals. The court held the subject of the amendment to be one properly addressed by statute rather than by a constitutional amendment. See Stovall v. Gartrell, 332 S.W.2d 256 (Ky. 1960.)
